Health requirement for temporary entry to Australia

Permanent visa applicants should refer to form
1071i Health requirement for permanent entry to Australia

Form

1163i

Why is there a health requirement for entry to Australia?

Australia enjoys some of the best health standards in the world. In order to help maintain these standards you must satisfy the health requirements specified in the Migration Regulations before you can be granted a visa for Australia. Dependants and family unit members who are included in the visa application are individually required to satisfy health requirements.

Australia's health requirements are designed to:

- minimise public health and safety risks to the Australian community;
- contain public expenditure on health and community services; and
- maintain access of Australian residents to health and other community services.

Assessment of your health for temporary visa purposes depends on:

Your intended activities in Australia and some other circumstances

You may be asked to undergo a medical and/or x-ray examination if:

- you are likely to enter a hospital or health care area (including nursing homes);
- you are likely to be engaged at an Australian child care centre (including preschools and creches);
- you are aged 70 years old or older; or
- there are indications you may not meet the health requirement.

These situations are considered to be of special significance for your health status.

In addition, depending on your country of residence, you may be required to undergo a medical and/or x-ray examination if you are likely to enter a classroom situation.

The length of time you intend to stay in Australia

If you seek to stay less than 3 months and no special significance activity or circumstance, as described above, applies there are no routine requirements for formal medical or x-ray examination. Please note that Australia reserves the right to request medical information in any circumstances.

Where you have been staying over recent years

Tuberculosis (TB) is a serious disease which has been declared an epidemic and global emergency. Many countries in the world have relatively low rates of the disease. There are no routine x-ray requirements for persons who have lived entirely in these countries, and who intend a stay of up to 12 months, or sometimes longer, in Australia. You may be required to undertake a medical and/or x-ray examination if you:

- have stayed or lived more than 3 months in the past 5 years in a country (or countries) that has a higher risk rate of this disease than Australia; and
- intend to stay in Australia for more than 3 months.

(Please consult the table on the back page of this form).

Who will examine me?

Medical examinations and x-rays are conducted by qualified doctors and radiologists nominated by the Department of Immigration and Multicultural and Indigenous Affairs (the department). The costs of these examinations are paid by you directly to the doctors or clinics undertaking the examinations.

Do not complete your medical examination before you lodge your visa application – you will be advised when you need to do so.

If you are overseas and require a medical examination, a list of approved doctors can be found at www.immi.gov.au/allforms/doctors

If you are in Australia and require a medical examination – after seeking information from the department, you should contact Health Services Australia (HSA). In Australian country areas, you should contact the nearest HSA office to find your nearest Approved Medical Practitioner. You can contact HSA on 1300 361 046 or at www.healthoz.com.au

How does the Department decide if I meet the health criteria?

In the overwhelming majority of cases, there will be no requirement for a medical or x-ray examination, and a decision that you meet the health criterion will be made along with the assessment of other criteria for your visa. For those who require a medical or x-ray examination, a Medical Officer of the Commonwealth (MOC) will provide the department with an opinion on whether you meet the health requirement.

In doing so they will take into account:

- the results of the medical examination(s) and x-ray(s);
- medical history, age and period of intended stay in Australia; and
- other relevant considerations.

Only tuberculosis (TB) is mentioned in migration legislation as precluding the issue of a visa, but opportunity is given to enable an applicant to undergo treatment in most cases. Other health conditions are assessed on the potential cost and impact on the Australian community resulting from the possible use of health and community services.

Under the Migration Regulations, officers deciding visa applications must accept as correct the opinion of the MOC on whether applicants meet the health requirement. The Migration Regulations allow a waiver of the need to meet the health requirement in limited circumstances, but never where active tuberculosis is suspected. If you do not meet the health requirement and the waiver is not available or exercised, then under the Migration Regulations your application must be refused. The refusing officer will inform you of any review options.

About the information you give

The department is authorised to collect information under the Migration Act 1958. The information, including the results of any tests for Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) will be used to assess your health for an Australian visa. A positive HIV or other test results will not necessarily lead to a visa being denied. Your result(s) may be disclosed to the relevant Commonwealth, State and Territory health agencies.

* Your health may be of special significance and you may be required to undergo a chest x-ray and/or medical examination if:

- you are likely to enter a hospital or health care area (including nursing homes) for any reason. In this case an x-ray is minimum requirement regardless of length of stay. Applicants intending to be involved in medical procedures (eg. doctors, dentists, nurses) should undergo a HIV/Hep B and C testing. Low and medium risk country inhabitants may make short visits to patients in Australia without x-ray screening;
- you are likely to be engaged at an Australian childcare centre (including preschools and creches) either as an employee or trainee. In this case an x-ray is a minimum requirement regardless of length of stay;
- you are aged 70 years old or older:
 - onshore applicants are to be directed to HSA for a health assessment. Forms to be provided by HSA;
 - offshore applicants are to present a medical pro-forma (available from the Australian visa office) to their own doctor, or panel doctor (as considered appropriate by the post) for completion;
- you are a parent with a 'queued' migration application. A medical and x-ray is required for a stay greater than 6 months; or
- there are indications that you might not meet the health requirement regardless of length of stay.

Where there is a requirement for chest x-ray, this applies to persons/children 11 years and over.

For student visas – principal and secondary applicants are to undergo the same medical assessment unless special significance applies.
